

News highlights

- It has been a wild week on financial markets, with multiple swings, as troubling news on Covid competed with news of tightening of monetary policy to fight inflation. The daunting combination of a slowdown of economic activity and the withdrawal of monetary support hurt risky assets and drove a noticeable flattening of the US yield curve.
- The omicron variant continued to pop up in countries around the world with a lot of headline noise around its transmissibility, severity, and ability to escape vaccines. As of now, the only known unknown is that it will take a couple of weeks to determine the full impact of the variant.
- In a testimony before Congress, Fed Chair Powell said it's time to retire the word "transitory" when describing inflation and that it's appropriate to discuss wrapping up the taper more quickly at the next policy meeting. Part of the catalyst for this pivot seems to be the risk of omicron exacerbating supply-chain disruptions and associated inflation pressures.
- The US Senate passed a bill to fund the government through mid-February, averting the risk of a shutdown.
- OPEC+ stick to its plan to gradually increase oil production but with flexibility to adjust quickly if needed.
- Regulatory efforts against big tech geared up during the week with the US Federal Trade Commission suing to block chipmaker Nvidia Corp.'s proposed takeover of Arm Ltd. and the UK's antitrust regulator ruling that Meta Platforms, Facebook's parent company, must sell Giphy.
